Our Ship of State.
[The following vigorous and patriotic lines will be recognized as coming from the heart and pen of one of the most distinguished of our country's poets:]

1.
In the brave old days of Eighty-Seven,
One heart—one hope—one fate,
We fashioned the model, and laid the keel,
And banded our Ship of State:—
'Twas oak of our Northern mountains,
And pine of our Southern hills,
And our Midland's cedar and iron,
And our Wholesaler's linking wills,
Britannia ruled the wave then,
Mistress of many a sea,
And the Red cross flag was the signal
For other flags to flee;
But over the broad Atlantic,
But over the calm as fate,
Rode a gallant barque that flew from none—
And that was our Ship of State.

2.
Since the brave old days of 'Eighty Seven,
When we fashioned its glorious form,
And gave to the breeze its stripes and stars,
It has weathered many a storm—
But its captain has been of the truest men,
And its crews of the bravest tars,
And though its foes have been mighty,
It bears but a few faint scars.
With a constant watch o'er,
'Twas the Bulwark of the Free;
With an ocean's path to open,
'Twas the Eagle of the Sea:—
It has served the world's applause,
Till it stands without a rival
In the glory of its deeds.

3.
From the brave old days of 'Eighty Seven,
Till our evil days of late,
We've trusted the nation's safety
With our gallant Ship of State:—
But now, with a tempest gathering fast,
And a sea that threatens to overwhelm,
Her captain's a craven, who shrieks aghast,
And fears to man the helm.
Oh, for a day of that valor
The nation knew of old,
When her flag had heroes and statesmen
Beneath its every fold.
Oh, for an hour of MANHOOD,
To fix our wavering fate,
To lead on the helm with firmness,
And rescue our Ship of State!

STORY OF TOM MARSHALL.—On one occasion Tom Marshall heard R. J. Breckinridge speak, and falling in with him after the service, accompanied him home. "Why don't you preach better?" said Marshall. "I do as well as I can," answered Breckinridge. "Why don't you preach as the Saviour did?" continued Marshall. "That's hard to do," rejoined Breckinridge. "Preach in parables," said Marshall; "that's a very simple and easy thing to do; that's the way our Lord sets forth the truth." "Well Tom," said Breckinridge, "I have as high an opinion of your talents as anybody else has, and I set a higher estimate on your reading and information than most people do. I defy you to make a parable, and I defy you to find one in literature—outside of the New Testament." "Nonsense!" exclaimed Marshall; "I can make fifty, and I can find a hundred." "Well, try it, and let me know," replied Breckinridge. Shortly after they met again. "Well, Bob," said Marshall, "what about those things—the parables? I have tried my best, and can't make one; I've looked everywhere, and I can't find one. What does it all mean? I give it up." "You see," replied Breckinridge, "why I don't preach in parables. I can't do that."—Galaxy.

HOW COFFEE CAME TO BE USED.—It is somewhat singular to trace the manner in which arose the use of the common beverage of coffee, without which few persons, in any half or wholly civilized country in the world, now make breakfast. At the time Columbus discovered America, it had never been known or used. It grew in Arabia and Upper Ethiopia. The discovery of its use as a beverage is ascribed to the superior of a monastery in Arabia, who, desirous of preventing the monks from sleeping at their nocturnal services, made them drink the infusion of coffee, upon the reports of shepherds, who observed that their flocks were more lively after browsing on the fruit of that plant. Its reputation spread through the adjacent countries, and in about two hundred years it had reached Paris. A single plant, brought there in 1714, became the parent stock of all the French coffee plantations in the West Indies. The Dutch introduced it into Java and the East Indies, and the French and Spanish all over South America and the West Indies. The extent of the consumption now can hardly be realized. The United States alone annually consume it at the cost, on its landing, of from fifteen to sixteen millions of dollars.
